We apologize for the faulty link in the original email. The Washington Post article link is corrected.

In Case You Missed It...

In late March, The Washington Post spent two days at our Ponte Vedra headquarters to write a story on our program. Much to our surprise, when it was published, it made the front page!

The article zeroed in on the latest research conducted by Purdue University on our service dogs, supported by personal stories of our graduates. In case you missed it, you can read this landmark article here.

Dog Dish

The first ever animation about K9s For Warriors was recently created for us pro bono by Epic Dog Studios. The video is a unique, 60-second overview of what our program is about. Click the image to watch it on our YouTube channel.

Camp K9 News

This month, we're making a small mention about Camp K9's sister facility near Gainesville, the new Gold Family Campus.

Opened earlier this year, the Gold Family Campus will be used exclusively for female classes. The first class will arrive next month, so watch for an update on this inaugural class of K9s For Warriors' second facility! You can also follow its own Facebook page.
